

Kumo

It was a sunny day at Venice Beach, and I was walking with my mom along the boardwalk. The beach was full of people, street performers, and cool shops. As we walked, we passed a pet adoption booth, and I saw a little dog. He was fluffy and gray, with bright eyes and a wagging tail. I couldn't take my eyes off him.

A lady at the booth noticed me looking at the dog. She smiled and said, "His name is Kumo. He's up for adoption. He's a little shy, but he's super friendly." I went down, and Kumo immediately walked over to me, wagging his tail. My mom gave me a look, and I could tell she was thinking the same thing I was "He's perfect." "Let's think about it," she said, but I knew she liked him too.

Just then, my sister, who was a little ahead of us, turned around to see what was going on. When she saw Kumo, she smiled and said, "Aww, he's so cute!" I could tell right away she loved him too. "He'd be perfect for us" she added.

The lady told us Kumo had been rescued from a shelter and was ready for a new home. My mom asked some questions about him, like if he was healthy and how he behaved. The lady answered everything, and then my mom looked at me and smiled. "Okay, let's do it," she said. Just like that, Kumo was coming home with us.

We walked away from the booth, and Kumo happily walked beside me. My sister was already planning to buy him treats and toys. We headed back toward the beach, with Kumo trotting along happily in the sunshine. It was the start of a great new adventure for all of us.
